A Word of Welcome

IN welcoming the delegates to the American Bankers' Association Convention, the officials of the Bank of the Manhattan Company think it may be of interest to recall the nation-wide contacts of this Bank, many extending over a period of more than a hundred

The Bank of the Manhattan Company was founded in 1799.

Even as early as 1805, when the most rapid means of transportation was by stage coach, making less than 50 miles a day, the Bank had already established connections with banks in Philadelphia, Albany, Hartford, Newark, Trenton and other large cities.

As the country developed and new methods of communication and transportation appeared, relations with banks in points at ever greater distances were established, until today its contacts are to be found in every part of the nation and abroad as well.

In full confidence of the great mutual benefits to be derived by the discussion of urgent problems at the Convention now opening, we join with all New York banks in extending sincere greetings to the bankers of America.
